Specify Request:

Montana State University-Billings' Department of Rehabilitation and Human Services is requesting the name of the Bachelor of Science in Rehabilitation and Related Services be changed to the Bachelor of Science in Psychiatric Rehabilitation.

Four years ago the Federal Government changed the requirements for rehabilitation counselors in the state/Federal system of Vocational Rehabilitation to a minimum of a Masters degree. Since this change (known as CSPD), Bachelors level graduates in rehabilitation counseling have sought employment in the mental health field. The largest employer of MSU-Billings rehabilitation counseling graduates has been the Mental Health Center. The rehabilitation approach when applied to the mental health context is known as "psychiatric rehabilitation", and has been well received by employers and consumers alike because of its emphasis on vocational and community integration goals.
